Chapter 1 by Saydee Neuder

Chase was confused. His phone has been going off for the past 25 minutes non stop, but no one even texts him. Interrupting him from his proofreading of an article for the NY Times, his phone rang showing the big bold letter informing him it was an unknown number.

"hello, Chase Daniels speaking" He held the phone by his ear for what felt like 20 minutes when finally someone replied from the other end of the phone.

"Chase. We are willing to let you in on something you have been wanting to do for the past 4 years. Please meet us at 238 Olive Street for more details. Our messenger will be waiting for you" A deep masculine voice told him causing chase to jump back in surprise. He just sat there until he heard an annoying beeping coming from the other side of the phone. He was officially scared and did not know what to do. For the rest of the day, he sat at his desk trying to figure out whether or not he should go to 238 Olive street...and what the mysterious man was talking about what he had wanted to do.
